My husband Clay and I worked with Robert on a couple houses. He was always joking around and always had a smile on his face. He and Clay like to get a rise out of each other. He was a nice guy, and would do anything for you. Back in the winter of this year, 2018, I was pushing ice off a deck with a pink broom that I bought to use on the job site, and I broke it, so I went to Robert asking for a piece of wood to patch it together. He stopped what he was doing and spent about 30 mins mending my broom, I am sure he had a lot of other things to do, but he took time to fix it for me because he knew I was bummed out about it. I thought that was sweet. He reminded me of my own brother, who passed away a few years back. He also fixed out kerosene heater that we used on the job site and wouldn't take any money for it either, he just wanted to help out a friend. There are not many people like that anymore in this world. The job site seems so sad to me now, as I look around and see all the work that you done. Rest in peace Robert, you are truly missed!

We call our house," the house that Robert built". He was remarkably knowledgeable in all aspects of construction, could always be relied on to do quality work, and was the person our builder consulted when construction challenges occurred. Robert could do just about everything. His carpentry skills were amazing and the quality reflected the pride he took in his work. Robert was very likable, friendly, and a genuinely nice person. He impressed us with his love for his children, refusing to work on weekends, because weekends were "reserved for his kids". Our hearts go out to his mother, siblings, and his two beautiful children. My heart breaks everyday finding it so hard to believe this is true. I know you are flying high with the angels right now laughing and smiling in that unforgettable way! You are at final peace Bobby and I'll carry you and our time together always in my memory but mostly in my heart. All my love, support and healing prayers with all that loved you and all you left behind....until we meet again, rest easy Bobby
