is all so sweet, but now it is my turn. I am his second daughter, 3rd of 4 children. I am well aware that the the dead should not be spoken ill of because they are not here to defend themselves. I believe the lord will forgive me after what I have seen here. That being said... I am really happy for all of you that got to know that side of him. However, you don't know the man who he was to his own family. This is the same man who drank until he shit his pants, did all kinds of drugs, raped my sister's teenage friends and cheated on my mother (and one more unforgivable and inexcusable act which I will never reveal to his own family member). This, only to disappear when we were still young children without even trying to straighten his life out or at LEAST offer child support. This coward RAN for 30 years while I tried to find him. Only when he was diagnosed with cancer did he (not himself, but had his sister) contact us. I can only assume he was ready to try to get back in the good graces of the church. So when I see you crying graveside I can only think of 2 plausible explanations. 1: you didn't have a clue how dangerous this man was around your female relatives or 2: you didn't mind if he did. Sorry to wreck your pristine "cool guy" image of him, but I am just happy that he can't hurt anybody anymore. God bless and I hope no girls or women are too ashamed to speak of something he may have done to them. I pray he didn't... God bless

I did some electrical work for him at his house through Hero's Bridge. I even got to watch him one night sing karaoke at Craft and Crust. He was a cool guy. He will be missed.

Joe, you were Dads right hand man for many many many years.... I know he must have been waiting for you with open arms! Im so thankful that God put you in our lives 16 years ago, Dad, Robbie, Michael & myself along with all of our kids have each learned something from you and have a memory that will stay with us forever! I know you and dad are celebrating, give Heaven some hell & give my Daddy some love! We love you and will never forget you! - Chelsea
