Kevin Lewis posted:

Jim was nothing short of the best Great-grandfather Brayden could ever ask for. Since the beginning of Brayden's life he was always there for anything he needed. From clothes, games, school supplies, and letting him come over for a fun time at the pool. He always made sure Brayden was well taken care of while he was over, and if he could, took time out of his day to go out to events and take him to thing when I had no time to do, like Lego club. If I could share a few of my most memorable moments with Jim, it would be the times he took me out to his garage to show me his beautiful Grand National, and the one time Brayden and I went over to swim at the pool one afternoon and he came down asking if we'd like anything to eat, so brought us some chicken nuggets that tastes and looked exactly like Chick fil a nuggets, but then showed me it was store bought.
